DEDICATION

Throughout our first years of medical education, we have been exposed to numerous physicians who have a strong commitment to patient care and teaching. This year, we dedicate the Gray Matter to one of these people, Dr. Jimmy Simon. In the short time he has been at this institution, his untiring enthusiasm for and knowledge of pediatrics have inspired us, and his interest in the advancement of our education has been apparent to all. He demands the most from his co-workers in patient care, yet is able to maintain an atmosphere most conducive to learning and is a true friend of the student, always available. For these reasons, Dr. Simon has also been voted the outstanding teacher of the year by the class of 1976. We thank him.

CITATIONS FOR TEACHING EXCELLENCE

Paul B. Comer, M.D.

John H. Edmonds, M.D.

Drs. Paul Comer, John Edmonds, Robert Gibson, and John Hennessy have played a vital role in our education. Their high demands for excellence in themselves and their students, a strong commitment to patient care, and untiring enthusiasm for teaching make them worthy of our highest praise. We acknowledge their achievements with these awards.

Robert L. Gibson, M.D.

John F. Hennessy, M.D.

Christopher J. Dressel, Jr., M.D.

John E. Guicheteau, M.D.

Members of the housestaff, being the physicians with whom we have had the closest association, have contributed much to our clinical training. The 1976 graduating class wishes to take this opportunity to recognize two of these physicians, John Guicheteau and Chris Dressel, who through their dedication and willingness to teach have greatly influenced our medical education.

200 Years of Medicine 1776-1976

It would be inadequate to celebrate our nation's Bicentennial without considering America's contributions to medicine.

In the short history of our country numerous medical events in the United States have had a bearing on international medicine. Although we cannot boast the epoch-creators such as Pasteur, Koch and other transatlantic workers, America has produced several notable record makers with William Beaumont, Walter Reed, Ephraim McDowell, W.H. Welch and others. However, it must be remembered that the sources of the strength of American medicine are to be found in the studies pursued abroad in Great Britain, France and later Germany.

In the early Colonial period there were very few physicians or surgeons. Health conditions were horrendous, with one-half of the Mayflower's passengers dying within three months of their arrival. For the most part, the only educated persons in the floundering colonies were the clergy and it is not surprising that the principle palpators and practitioners of medicine also preached from the pulpit. Thus the first American medical publication, a broadside on smallpox, was written by a physician-clergyman, Thomas Thatcher, in 1677.

At the beginning of the National period civilization and cultural wealth in America had proliferated considerably and thus the medical field progressed also. The versatile Benjamin Franklin inspired the establishment of the first hospital in the United States in Philadelphia in 1752. As an inventor, Franklin also contributed bifocal lenses to the medical profession.

The most famous doctor of the American Revolution was Benjamin Rush. A typical representative of the Enlightenment, Rush signed the Declaration of Independence. Besides politics, he also espoused in the areas of psychiatry and anthropology.

Pennsylvania Hospital in Philadelphia – the oldest institution intended solely for the care of the sick and wounded in the United States.

Surgeon's Hall on Fifth Street, Philadelphia.

Medical education prior to the foundation of medical colleges had been through the preceptorial system under which the future doctor was apprenticed to an older man for four to seven years. Only a few, such as Benjamin Rush, augmented their training by studying in Edinburg, Paris or Germany. By 1775, there were an estimated thirty-five hundred physicians in this country, of which only four hundred held a university medical degree. In 1765 Dr. John Morgan and Dr. William Shipper founded the first medical school in the United States at the College of Philadelphia. Shortly thereafter other fine medical centers developed at Harvard University and New York, the latter training Samuel Bard who was physician to George Washington.

In the 1860's, the Civil War contributed to the degeneration and dissolution of the medical centers that developed in the South. The rapid westward expansion of the country and absence of legal regulation lowered medical educational standards. The quality of the medical schools can be reflected by their quantity. There were over four hundred medical schools in the United States in the nineteenth century. It was not until 1930 that the number had been reduced to seventy-six well-qualified institutions.

The Wake Forest College School of Medicine was founded in 1902 through the perseverance of Dr. C.E. Taylor, President of Wake Forest College. As a two year medical school the first class enrolled 13 students, seven of whom lacked Dr. Taylor's perseverance and failed the first year. In 1941 the school moved to Winston-Salem and became a four year medical school associated with North Carolina Baptist Hospital. Along with the $600,000 acquired through a bequest of the late Bowman Gray, the Wake Forest College School of Medicine also acquired his name. Through the shrewd efforts of Coy Carpenter the Bowman Gray School of Medicine was firmly established and accepted 45 students to the four-year school in 1941. With the class of 1976 BGSM has awarded 1161 MD's.

Medical Research

American developments in medical research have been numerous, especially in the last thirty years. Some notable early pioneers of medicine include Theobald Smith who in 1902 described the phenomenon of anaphylaxis. The advancement of medical research is largely the result of the prodigious efforts of William H. Welch. At Johns Hopkins Medical School he encouraged the emphasis on research methods and research facilities. Welch also was instrumental in formulating policy for the Rockefeller Foundation, founded in 1901, which was to play a prominent part in the development and sponsoring of research in the United States.

At the Bowman Gray School of Medicine there are approximately 107 research projects in progress with grants and contracts totaling $4,463,449. Research ranges from studies on salamanders to squirrel monkeys. Some of the outstanding accomplishments of the research at Bowman Gray include numerous contributions in neurology and medical sonics. The Specialized Center of Research in Arteriosclerosis is one of only thirteen in the nation.

Clinical Medicine

The clinical medicine of the present day developed in the second half of the nineteenth century as a result of the progress in histology, pathology, and pharmacology. The integration of laboratory results and clinical observation contributed greatly to diagnostic knowledge. Of major importance was the discovery that infectious diseases are caused by microorganisms. From the new science of bacteriology scientific medicine developed to achieve its present standing.

The tremendous progress of surgery during the nineteenth century can be attributed to anesthesia, asepsis and localistic pathological anatomy. The famous trial operation with ether was demonstrated by William Morton in Massachusetts General Hospital on October 16, 1846. Two decades later the last of the great Quaker physicians, Joseph Lister, tackled the problem of wound infection with carbolic acid. Antiseptics and asepsis rejuvenated surgery entirely and transformed the gangrenous surgical wards into a better prognostic perspective. The United States also contributed several outstanding gynecological surgeons, including Sims, Emmett, and the Atlee brothers. The first ovariectomy was carried out in the frontier backwoods of Kentucky by Ephraim McDowell in 1809. Technical improvements and inventions contributed considerably to the rapid advance of medicine.

Favorite Pastimes.

Throughout American history physicians have excelled as athletes, authors, historians and in numerous other areas outside the medical realm. Soccer and golf were two of the more popular games played among doctors during the 1800's. Tennis in this country was originally played only by lawyers, doctors and merchants. The "father" of American tennis was Dr. James Dwight, a Boston physician. Dr. Dwight helped establish the U.S. National Lawn Tennis Association of which he served as president for 21 years. Dr. Dwight also organized the first Davis Cup competition. Another creditable tennis player, the neurosurgeon Harvey Cushing, also found fun and health in tennis.

Throughout the history of Bowman Gray, medical students and faculty have organized baseball, basketball, football and soccer teams as well as flying and sailing clubs. Presently the faculty has a variety of activities to relieve their anxieties and frustrations and develop their talents. Although some of the sports have become more sophisticated, in the past thirty years the parties haven't changed at all.

IN MEMORIAM

Dr. Hugh B. Lofland, avid sportsman, effective teacher, capable administrator, and scientist of international reputation. He was a man of gentle understanding, always willing to listen to the problems of students and employees alike, but a man of firm principles, some would say even stubborn, when he felt he was right. He demanded quality in himself and others. This was perhaps seen best in his accomplishments as a teacher and in his persistent dedication to the development of a quality graduate program at Bowman Gray. Dr. Lofland will be missed by the students and faculty, but most of all by those of us who benefited from his leadership.

Dr. Richard W. St. Clair

Hugh B. Lofland, Ph.D.

Throughout his years with us, Norman Sulkin was always a devoted scholar and teacher. The medical school and the department of anatomy were the center of his life and interest, and respect and concern for his students and colleagues were evident at all times. His scholarly research in neuroanatomy will continue to enrich the literature and serve to guide the efforts of future investigators.

Dr. Charles E. McCreight

Norman M. Sulkin, Ph.D.

Julian Martin, Ph.D.

Taken at the dawn of a promising academic career, Julian Martin's congenial personality gained the esteem of graduate students, co-workers, and faculty. He left a lasting impression on those who were fortunate to know him well.

Dr. Carlos Rapela
Dr. Alvin Brodish

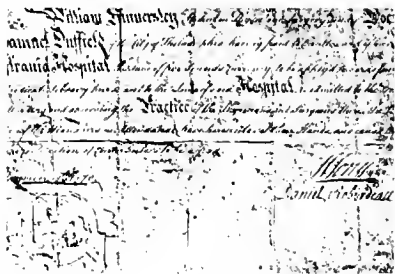

Dorothy Ayer

For 21 years, Dorothy Ayer served as secretary to the Neurosurgical Section; for 18 of those years, she was also secretary to the Chief of Professional Services — in all, a significant part of her life, but also a period in which she could reveal the characteristics that made her so popular and such a valuable part of the medical center. Her loyalty to those for whom she worked, to the hospital, and to the medical school was fervent and unabashed. Although she was kind and considerate to all, she could never tolerate divided loyalties. She was a severe taskmaster for herself; there were no bounds to her effort when important work was to be accomplished, and she was recognized as a person who could get things done when many others could not. Despite the perfection she expected from herself, she was always diplomatic and courteous. Although many things may have troubled her from time to time, one could never detect it from her appearance. All who worked with her were devoted to her and they miss her each day.

Dr. Eben Alexander

America Can Do. These words symbolize our nation's ever-growing capacity to achieve... our resourcefulness, our strength. Strength that has met every challenge from the moment the last signature was inscribed on the Declaration of Independence to placing the first man on the moon. Today, as we resolve our economic problems, let's all be ever-mindful, ever-positive that America Can Do.

...inner space

Measurement of blood flow in inner space is achieved through the CME CATHETER PROBE* ... 1000 series.

This sub-miniature intravascular probe, designed for CME Flowmeters, measures continuous and simultaneous data on both pulsatile and mean flow velocities in CM/Sec. It detects forward and reverse velocities. This smooth, blunt tip probe, mounted at the end of a special catheter, is sensitive to flow over, rather than through the probe, producing an output signal linearly proportional to flow velocity.

The electromagnetic catheter probe is available in 7, 8 and 9 French ... sizes 8 and 9 French with or without a pressure lumen. The pressure lumen, an integral part of the catheter, enables simultaneous detection of blood velocity and blood pressure by a single catheter. This same lumen may be used for withdrawals of blood or injection of medication.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

The staff of the 1976 Gray Matter would like to extend our most sincere thanks to the following people, for without their help the completion of our annual would not have been possible: Jack Bodenhamer, Jack Dent, Pat Lee and Joe Roselli of the Department of Audio-Visual Resources for special effects, art work, and taking our portraits; the administration for their patience and appropriations; the Department of Information and Publications as our professional consultants; Neil Campbell and Mike Sprinkle from the library for the history of medicine references which have been overdue for three months; Dr. Robert Prichard for his historical knowledge; Brenda Sink for duplication services; Linda Colvard for typing the Freshmen's copy; Beth Lyon for typing the Junior's copy; George Lupton for his assistance with the Senior's photos; 436 Hawthorne Road for allowing the sophomores to usurp their home; George Jones for consistently turning off the lights and locking us out; our spouses and friends for tolerating our chronic absence and abstinence; the Promotions Committee for passing us in Units III and IV; and Hunter Publishing Company for never interfering or assisting with our work. Our apologies to anyone whose picture was inadvertently omitted.

COLOPHON

Five hundred and seventy copies of the 1976 Gray Matter were printed by Hunter Publications, Winston-Salem, North Carolina. Our book was printed in Palatino type for copy blocks and captions. To set off the blocks, we used 24 point Quadrata type as headlines. All of this was printed on Saxony finished paper in brown/black ink.
